Begining in Private Practice

Monday 27th June 2022 (10am - 4pm), Zoom

"Sarah is a great presenter. I took so much away from this session to help me develop my private practice; had so many questions answered. It was really helpful to share and learn from other course participants too."

Setting up in private practice is a rewarding and challenging process. Many dramatherapists can feel unsure about making the transition and what setting up in private practice entails.

This workshop will support you to:

1. Feel more confident about being a dramatherapist in private practice and support your thinking in relating work and self-management.

2. Understand and address some of the issues involved in setting up in private practice.

3. Work ethically and safely.

4. Manage the demands on you that come from working in private practice.

5. Support a stimulating workshop environment to explore your development as a dramatherapist in private practice.

6. Offer a Q & A session to respond to issues of developing a private practice.

Whether you are considering setting up or have just started this workshop will support your development in private practice. Delegates are invited to share their own examples of good practice regarding private practice.

BADth recommends that Newly Qualified Dramatherapists do not set up a private practice until they have substantial Dramatherapy experience and their clinical supervisor thinks that they are ready and in a position to do so and the work is supervised and well supported.

Sarah Mann Shaw works as an independent practitioner offering group and individual Dramatherapy, Child and Adolescent Psychotherapy and Integrative Psychotherapy with children, young people and adults in the East Midlands. She is also a clinical supervisor. She has been developing a busy private practice over the last twenty years and delivers therapy to local authorities, schools and to privately referred individuals.
